Brentwood, TN -- Senator Marsha Blackburn and Senator-elect Bill Hagerty today announced they will oppose the certification of Electoral College results this week in the United States Senate.

"Tennesseans elected us as their United States Senators to represent their views and values in Washington and to always fight for them, which is why we have concluded without any reservation that we will stand against tainted electoral results from the recent Presidential election. We know that our elections, built around the Electoral College which is a fundamental element, are the envy of the world. Protecting their integrity and ensuring the results are free and fair are critical to maintaining the trust of our own citizens. Since November 3, hardworking men and women from across Tennessee have contacted us to justifiably express anger and concern that some states conducted the recent election in a manner that did not respect the rule of law and may have violated many of their state constitutions as well as Article II of the U.S. Constitution. Many are concerned about the sanctity of the one person one vote guarantee. Our founders understood that it is ultimately the people's job to preserve the sanctity of these most fundamental American systems, and so they charged the people's representatives in Congress with a specific role in the process. We plan to exercise that role fully in the new Congress." — Senator Marsha Blackburn and Senator-elect Bill Hagerty
